In both cases he was a weak respectability, as lost as are some clergy men without the book of common prayer. Nature, which gave him such fine dexterities, had given him no personality, and his biography is merely a succession of brilliant incidents, amongst which we look in vain for a consistent character. Lee was always wavering, and always falling on the soft side. He did not know whether he ought to surrender to Grant or not, but he surrendersed. His virtue was bounded by the respectabilities, and he seemed to have been a voluptious rature trying severely to ascertain some principles to guide himself by, but generally failing. It is not impossible, and it looks defensible, that one of the notions which took him into the reseased a good deal of the property of the late Georgo Washington, with scruples both ways, and who possessed a good deal of the property of the late Georgo Washington, might be ponneed upon as providential.

Lee as a generally means something less than a man, a man toned down, as if Mr. Palmer, the sculptor, undertook to reform and potish the man of Michael Angelo. It is so pleasant in this life to meet one who will never antagonize himself because of his superior salt-consciousness, and who, therefore, can never be called selfish, mand though he might be an aristocrat. We have the sent of man infrequently in a democracy, and he is always in request.

Our wives get to revere him, and wonder the selection of a fearful scene which are at Bazullles:

THE PROSE OF HIS PEDIGRE.
Like's descent was as good as the bestbetter than Washington's—beginning with a royalist Secretary of the Colony of Virginia in the 1631. The family attained the only distinction of any consequence in the revolution, some of them boing fair soldiers, others, like Arthur, of little account, except to bother Dr. Franklin and others on points of political economy.

Harry Lee, father of the Southern leader, was a blind partizan with military virtues, who died from wounds inflicted by a Baltimote mob—the same kind of mob which murdered troops in Prattstreet fifty years afterward,—for his outery against the war of 1812. He married into simpering families twice, and left five children, of whom only Robert E. proved to possess blood. Henry's oldest son, "Major" Henry Lee, was rejected by the Senate when Jockton nominated him for the insignificant post of Consul at Algiers; he then moved to Paris, and published parts of books abusing Jefferson and puffing Napoleon. The second son of "Light Horse Harry" lives at Rechmond still an indolent live, and is never heard of; he Harry Lee, father of the Southern leadindolent life, and is never heard of; he married into a rich slaveholding family, and, therefore, had no need, like the other and, therefore, had no need, had the other two brothers Sidney and Robert E., to go, the one into the United States navy, the other into the United States army. Their sister matricel in Virginia, and little is known about her. This shorn of all abourd iteration of names, small honors, and inter-marriages, is the history of the Lee family. A good many old rattle-trap houses stand in the fever and ague neeks of Virginia where numerous Lees lived, but, as producers of thoughts and things, the family;

Robert never did anything of this sort, but, as the California miners say, the family had well "petered out" by the time the blood got down to him. about fifteen minutes past elever At about lifteen minutes past eleven o'clock yesterday morning, many of the inhabitants of this city, particularly those who happened to be up stairs at the time, were both astonished and alarmed by a rumbling, shaking sensation, something like that experienced simultaneously with the firing of a great gun in the vicinity. It only lasted for an instant, and only one shock was felt distinctly. Although many were under the impression that it was the were under the impression that it was the result of the discharging of cannons aboard some war vessel in the harbor, the belief that it could have been nothing less than an earthquake gained general credence. The higher the building the great was the aboard treatment and milks were was shock it sustained, and while many persons who were in the basements of their dwellings and places of business, felt mone of the unusual shaking, those in the upper stories were rocked backwards and forwards as though the whole structure was tottering on the roint of a fall

The high tenement houses were most susceptible to it, and in many places the frightened inmates came rushing into the street in the most panic-stricken condition. At a large tenement house on Thirtieth the stove in an upper room was precipitated to the floor, and that the window-realies rattled as though the glass would break.

A lady who sat at sewing-machine at work thought she was going to faint, until she noticed every moveable thing in the room was affected by the shook. Rev. Dr. Spear was sitting in conversation with his daughter at the time, and thought that he had been or was about to be stricken with paralysis, but was reassured by seeing the chandeliers and pictures moving. Some months since, the Philadelphia Ledger contained a notice of a new locomotive constructed in Scotland, the peculiarity of which is its use on common roads; or even over land where there are no roads. The machine is the subject of a Parliamentary paper, lately published. The British War Department has investiguted the invention, and it is pronounced England, Austria and Italy Dem and in official reports far more useful than any horse. The superintendent of machinery says he has "come to the conclusion that the question of steam traction on common roads is now completely solved;" that the application of the india-rubber tire is a perfect success: that it opens up an entirely new field, and that he looks upon the application as a discovery, rather than as invention.
